MOLD: WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

Mold is a natural part of our environment, but when found in high levels in indoor environments it can lead to dangerous health conditions, decreased property values and potential litigation. It is now routinely accepted by indoor air professionals that immediate and appropriate corrective action should be taken as soon as possible when mold issues are encountered.

Traditional mold remediation methods utilize old technologies, are inherently expensive and disruptive, and do not provide long-term protection to prevent future mold growth.

There are many choices for property owners and managers when faced with mold contamination issues. It is critically important before selecting a mold remediation contractor and accepting a remediation estimate that the customer should understand and consider the important points on the following page.
